The Tobacco Interests. We desire to remain in entire harmony and friendship with our agricultural friends, whose importance and worth none could more highly appreciate than ourselves; and they would, no doubt, agree with us that little advantage is to come to anybody from any alienation of feeling between tobaccoplanters and those who perform the business of guarding, and selling, and buying tobacco. We can hardly believe that a convention composed of representatives of all interests could fail to harmonize upon regulations reasonable and fair to all.

As we understand it there is no great contest in the matter of inspection as to quality. The two brands "passed" and "refused," now prevailing, signify nothing with regard to the numerous grades of a commodity that sells for from $3 to $150, and even $200 per hundred pounds. The terms were employed at the time when it was deemed unwise to allow the aggregate crop to exceed a certain quantity, and the grade to fall below "passed." So logically the "refused" met the fate of the damned, and was burned by the common hangman before the public. The producers of the "refused" lost their year's labor, and went home feeling that they had met a just fate under the Tobacco gospel of the day in which they believed.

It is not so now. The "refused" is not burned, and we have retained the phraseology while we have rejected the faith of our ancestors. There is no reason for it.

But the conflict seems to be about stripping, sampling, and storage. If the parties to the affair cannot settle these points they must lack somewhat the moderate and reasonable mental condition which cannot fail to reach just conclusions in settling practical questions.

There is one point, however, to which w wish to call attention. That is an apparent attempt to put under the ban western tobacco. To do so would tend to drive from this market that rich western tobacco trade which this State has expended millions of dollars to win. For what was the Chesapeake and Obio railroad built if it was not built for this? Suppose it be driven away, will that benefit the Virginia farmer? Does he not want to see Richmond prosper that we may have a great city to supply, whose necessaries of life will offord demand for all the farm products, and which will pay so large a part of the State debt, now so burthensome upon him?

We may be permitted to suggest in all kindliness to our fellow-citizens that they may leave the whole question of grade to the purchaser. He knows good tobacco from bad as well as the farmer himself, He would soon sink all his money if he did not. With this fact that is undeniable, and with that competition whose keenness and activity can only be increased by increasing the amount of tobacco sold here, what farmer can suppose that his tobacco ket? Will a brand prescribed by the farmer with the intention of damuing the tobacco he does not produce make his better or make it bring him more money?

We have little doubt that the practical questions at issue can be readily settled by the parties. And we do trust that the farmers will not deem it necessary that laws tending to drive away the western trade from Richmond shall be maintained or passed for their protection. Mr. RAG-LAND's report assumed that we had absorbed the North Carolina trade. Very true; but if the North Carolinians value his compliment as they should, may they, too, not set up for themselves and demand the brand "North Carolina" in the Richmond market? If the "I am holier than thou," is the notion to be carried out, we do not see that they would not be justified in seeking another market, where what they may claim for themselves may be acknowledged.

We speak only of general principles. I all concerned will dismiss prejudices and consider the whole tobacco question with reference to the interests of all, and of course the State in her commerce as well as her production, we have no fear but the matter can be adjusted upon a plan at least approaching

New York, Baltimore, and Richmond.

Baltimore, we suspect, thinks quite well enough of herself; but if she is incumbered with modesty, the New York papers do not fail to sound her eulogies and cover her with blushes. The Tribune invites attention to the fact that an old paper of Newport is preserved in that city which contains a paragraph announcing to the people of that place that the week preceding as many vessels arrived at New York as there did at Newport, and it warned the people of Newport to "look out," as New York was fast stealing away their commerce. The Newporters laughed at the warning as a false alarm, and ridiculed the idea that the little village of New York could ever endanger the supremacy of New-

In turn, according to the Tribune, the average New Yorker is proud, and treats with contempt the suggestion that Baltimore is making inroads upon the Great Gotham. But the same paper considers it worth while to remember:

"1. Baltimore succeeded some years ago in getting away our coffee trade. "2. A few years later custom-house extortions and transportation difficulties drove away our metal trade.

"3. Baltimore is gradually getting more and more of our grain trade, and there is danger that another fraction of it may be diverted to Boston. "4. The distance of New York from the seaboard is greater than that of some of its ambitious rivals, so that this city has to contend against natural disadvantages as well as the shiftless neglect to provide the proper terminal facilities," These are certainly things to be remembered. They ought to make Baltimore proud, and they ought to remind New York that however great she may be she is yet not above injury, and that her citizens must know that supremacy is maintained only by vigilance and energy.

Baltimore's gain is in a great degree her Baltimore's gain is in a great degree her legucy from the war. Her railroad occupied an advantageous position, and much of its wealth came from its vast service to the Federal Government during the war. It was the chief agent in the partition of Virginia, and to that extent in weakening and under- FOR SALE, THREE MILCH mining the integrity of Virginia commerce in so far as it affected that of Baltimore. We make this no cause of quarrel or ill-will here towards Bultimore, but the facts are to be considered in the matter of the commercial history of the Middle States.

Furthermore, Baltimore succeeds to the coffee trade not so much from inability on the part of New York to control it as from | no 27.31*

the expansied condition of this city, covered with ashes and despairing amid her rains, after the war. We had furnished the bread-stuffs that paid in the main for the coffee. Baltimore stood next in the place of advantage for controlling that trade, and sheavailed herself of that advantage while the war ruled this city out of the market. Hence her position which is thus noticed by the New York Tribune. But our mills are reviving. One which, in the development of the remarkable succession of calamities which fell upon this city, was reduced to ashes not long since, is now rearly rebuilt, and in a few months the capacity of our flouring mills will be recovered, and we shall be again in the condition to supply the outgoing freights that will pay for the coffee. Then we shall only want the capital and the enterprise which are needed to control the coffee trade to take a great part of it under our direction. We have the means of distributing it, and can manage it as well as Baltimore. Why may we not be a competitor also in the trade in minerals? We need an extension of our railroad facilities; but we at least have as good facilities in this respect as Baltimore bas, for she can boast of only one railway that is peculiarly enlisted in her ser-

While New York may not suffer any ma erial diminution of her wealth and dignity the rivalry that has arisen will result in the benefit of both New York and Biltimore, and also in the benefit of the public at large, by the consequent increase of facilities and the diminution of charges and costs of transportation and goods. We may congratulate Baltimore upon the rapid advancement that followed her schemes and exertions of all kinds, and we may be permitted, in a friendly way, to advise her in aspiring to the dignity of a great city, to abate the nuisance of her offensive basin, and to adopt other improvements in keeping with the high position to which she aspires. Incidentally, we beg leave to ask for this city tairness at the hands of the thriving and powerful cities. She has been the victim of calamity, and she is now the victim of some very outrageous and unfair "terminal regulations," so called. Her peculiar grief is like that of the eagle, that some of the arrows that have wounded her have been equipped with feathers plucked from her own wing.

It might be considered a little presumptuous for us even to name Richmond in company with these great cities; but when we consider Richmond's advantages and what she has done we see no such presumption in the discussion. She was the centre of that exceed thirty-two gallons; these shall be kept at a rebellion whose disastrous end brought the worst consequences upon her. Her commercial district was destroyed by fire, while her whole trade had been suspended to be deposited in the result of the partial was destroyed by fire, while her whole trade had been suspended to be deposited in the garbage vessels. Any person and a large part of it diverted to other channels and places. She has been rebuilt; her trade in a great degree recovered, while she has gained a large business she had not before the war; she has paid off the debt she incurred in the work of rebuilding her burned district; she has deepened the channel of the James river so as to accommodate the coasting trade, and in a great degree the foreign; she owes less money would not bring its proper value in the mar- than any other city we know of in proportion to population; she is improving very tion to population; she is improving very rapidly; has borne the panic better than any other place on the Atlantic; and is now cheered by a very bright future, both with reference to her trade and her manufactures. Naturally one of the most beautiful cities in the Union, she is also one of the best endowed for manufacturing purposes. Her means of distribution to all quaaters of the Union and the globe are good, and will be greatly improved. Her media of access to the interior are excellent, with the exception of the contents of any privies, privy vaults, boxes, and sinks (except substances not soluble in water), shall be removed therefore, or shall be transported through any street, avenue, alley, or other rubble place, except as the same shall be removed and transported by means of some airtight apparatus, pneumatic, or other process, so as to prevent the contents of said privy, vault, &c., being agliated or exposed in the open air during said process of removal and transportation.

2. That the President of the contents of any privies, privy vaults, boxes, and sinks (except substances not soluble in water), shall be removed therefrom, or shall be transported through any street, avenue, alley, or other rubble place, except as the same shall be removed and transported by means of some airtight apparatus, pneumatic, or other process, so as to prevent the contents of said privy, vault, &c., being agliated or exposed in the open air during said process of removal and transportation.

2. That the President of the Board of Health be and he is hereby instructed to contract for the term of one year for the removal of the night-soil of this city by the process authorized by the preceding section: Provided, that In no case shall the charge for such service exceed the price of one dollar and a half for sixteen and a halt cubic feet, or fifty gallous, and elghteen cents for each cubic foot in the the interior are excellent, with the exception that some of them are now burthened with regulations which are unfavorable, but which may be changed. So that we may safely say that, although we cannot hope that Richmond will be an equal of the big cities we have been speaking of, she will certainly be a large participator in the trade for which they are contending, and will probably rise to be the very finest inland town in the United States.

In conclusion, let us say there will be enough for all the Atlantic towns, and we take occasion to admonish all against the bad passion of greed and the mean desire to monopolize. Let all pursue a generous and just rivalry, and all will flourish, and the solution of the agents, with whom the President of the Board of Health may contract, as is provided for in section 2 of this ordinance; nor shall the owner or occupant of any such premises public will be largely the gainer by the con-
